To be Beside the Seaside

The Victorians on holiday

By the assistance of sea water I can relieve the disorder of the internal glands! claimed Dr. Richard Russell in 1752. Soon after wealthy and robust people began to come of the seaside in search of cures which included drinking a gallon of salt water a day and taking repeated cold plunges into the sea.

England's elite joined in when the French Revolutionary War began in 1793. The Grand Tour to the Continent was suddenly out of bounds and coastal towns benefited from the resulting boom in home tourism.

The 'Maiden' at all the watering and 'Sea Bathing Place' noted the respectable nineteenth century. 'The society at hour morning in its debauchery's centre presented a sight which was computing
