The Field Cricket
Cryllus campestris

The field cricket is a common insect found in grassy areas. It is known for its loud chirping sound, which is produced by rubbing its wings together. The cricket is a beneficial insect as it helps to control the population of other insects in the field. It is also a popular food source for many birds and other animals.

What has happened to the ancient head barrows at Lord's Piece?

The ancient head barrows at Lord's Piece are a significant archaeological site. They are believed to be the remains of a prehistoric settlement. The barrows are made of earth and stone, and are arranged in a circular pattern. They are surrounded by a low wall, which is thought to be a defensive structure. The site is located in a field, and is surrounded by trees and bushes. It is a very interesting site, and is worth a visit for anyone interested in history.
