

'Brown rang Murdoch to say his newspaper was disgusting'

A very angry Gordon Brown called Rupert Murdoch to tell him that one of his newspapers had treated him in a 'disgusting' way over a letter of condolence he sent to a mother of a soldier killed in Afghanistan.

The sun newspaper criticised Mr Brown for apparently misspelling the dead man's name and other words in his 2009 note. According to a summary provided to the Leveson Inquiry by one of Mr Brown's secretary's. The ex-politician told Mr Murdoch that the coverage was 'hurtful personally' and 'damaging to the war effort'.

Witnesses told the Mail on Sunday newspaper Mr Brown used stronger language on the phone and told the media mogul that his paper had treated him in a disgusting and unforgivable manner.

Direct and Reported Speech

Read the text above and consider how the text reports what people said and answer the following:

Does the article use mainly reported speech or direct speech? Why do you think this is so?

Select three examples of reported speech and say why you think the writer used reported speech instead of direct speech?

Select three examples of direct speech and say why you think the writer used direct speech instead of reported speech?

Is there anything distinctive you notice about the use of reported speech in news reports/articles?

Is there anything distinctive you notice about the use of direct speech in news reports/articles?

'Brown rang Murdoch to say his newspaper was disgusting'

A very angry Gordon Brown called Rupert Murdoch to tell him that one of his newspapers had treated him in a 'disgusting' way over a letter of condolence he sent to a mother of a soldier killed in Afghanistan.

The sun newspaper criticised Mr Brown for apparently misspelling the dead man's name and other words in his 2009 note. According to a summary provided to the Leveson Inquiry by one of Mr Brown's secretary's. The ex-politician told Mr Murdoch that the coverage was 'hurtful personally' and 'damaging to the war effort'.

Witnesses told the Mail on Sunday newspaper Mr Brown used stronger language on the phone and told the media mogul that his paper had treated him in a disgusting and unforgivable manner.

Direct and Reported Speech

Read the text above and consider how the text reports what people said and answer following:

Does the article use mainly reported speech or direct speech? Why do you think this is?

'Brown rang Murdoch to say his newspaper was disgusting'

A very angry Gordon Brown called Rupert Murdoch to tell him that one of his newspapers had treated him in a 'disgusting' way over a letter of condolence he sent to a mother of a soldier killed in Afghanistan.

The sun newspaper criticised Mr Brown for apparently misspelling the dead man's name and other words in his 2009 note. According to a summary provided to the Leveson Inquiry by one of Mr Brown's secretary's. The ex-politician told Mr Murdoch that the coverage was 'hurtful personally' and 'damaging to the war effort'.

Witnesses told the Mail on Sunday newspaper Mr Brown used stronger language on the phone and told the media mogul that his paper had treated him in a disgusting and unforgivable manner.

Select three examples of reported speech and say why you think the writer used reported speech instead of direct speech?

'Brown rang Murdoch to say his newspaper was disgusting'

A very angry Gordon Brown called Rupert Murdoch to tell him that one of his newspapers had treated him in a 'disgusting' way over a letter of condolence he sent to a mother of a soldier killed in Afghanistan.

The sun newspaper criticised Mr Brown for apparently misspelling the dead man's name and other words in his 2009 note. According to a summary provided to the Leveson Inquiry by one of Mr Brown's secretary's. The ex-politician told Mr Murdoch that the coverage was 'hurtful personally' and 'damaging to the war effort'.

Witnesses told the Mail on Sunday newspaper Mr Brown used stronger language on the phone and told the media mogul that his paper had treated him in a disgusting and unforgivable manner.

Select three examples of direct speech and say why you think the writer used direct speech instead of reported speech?

'Brown rang Murdoch to say his newspaper was disgusting'

A very angry Gordon Brown called Rupert Murdoch to tell him that one of his newspapers had treated him in a 'disgusting' way over a letter of condolence he sent to a mother of a soldier killed in Afghanistan.

The sun newspaper criticised Mr Brown for apparently misspelling the dead man's name and other words in his 2009 note. According to a summary provided to the Leveson Inquiry by one of Mr Brown's secretary's. The ex-politician told Mr Murdoch that the coverage was 'hurtful personally' and 'damaging to the war effort'.

Witnesses told the Mail on Sunday newspaper Mr Brown used stronger language on the phone and told the media mogul that his paper had treated him in a disgusting and unforgivable manner.

Is there anything distinctive you notice about the use of reported speech in news reports/articles?

'Brown rang Murdoch to say his newspaper was disgusting'

A very angry Gordon Brown called Rupert Murdoch to tell him that one of his newspapers had treated him in a 'disgusting' way over a letter of condolence he sent to a mother of a soldier killed in Afghanistan.

The sun newspaper criticised Mr Brown for apparently misspelling the dead man's name and other words in his 2009 note. According to a summary provided to the Leveson Inquiry by one of Mr Brown's secretary's. The ex-politician told Mr Murdoch that the coverage was 'hurtful personally' and 'damaging to the war effort'.

Witnesses told the Mail on Sunday newspaper Mr Brown used stronger language on the phone and told the media mogul that his paper had treated him in a disgusting and unforgivable manner.

Is there anything distinctive you notice about the use of direct speech in news reports/articles?